And so it was.

The Dragon thought he had won

He believed he conquered the Great White Lion

and stripped him of his throne

The Dark Dragon flew across all the nations of the earth,

Water, Earth, Fire, Air

his wings casting shadows over kingdoms

He deceived many,

not with force

but with promise.

Order without repentance.

Peace without truth.

And the New World Order

began to breathe.

Then I saw rise from the Sea

a beast of the deep

the Leviathan

His mouth burned with blasphemy, his words like fire wrapped in fear

He swiveled across the oceans with ambition, stirring trade routes of the nations armies, and ports

He gathered the crocodiles of brute strength thick-skinned, iron-jawed, unfeeling.

And the beast

sat in a temple of the Lord, placing himself where only the Holy could dwell before

And he demanded worship

from every nation,

every tribe,

every mirror

every shore.

Then I saw rise from the Earth

another beast

the Behemoth.

He looked warm,

like a gentle giant grazing in open fields.

But beneath the wool

was a ravenous wolf.

He deceived the world with his charm

fooled them with tricks dressed as miracles

danced like a famous magician and He walked with serpents, they all whispered into the ears of kings and queens:

“You will not surely fall.”

“This is for peace.”

“This is for progress.”

“This is for the children.”

And crowns nodded.

The Sea Beast

The Earth Beast

worked as one body.

Strength without conscience.

Wisdom without reverence.

Order without heaven.

And the Dragon watched, pleased.

For the world was no longer ruled by chaos

many rejoiced,

the chains were hidden,

and the cage was called salvation.

But somewhere deep in the bones of creation,

A Growl of a lion echoed through the wind

The Dragon paused mid-flight.

He knew it.

The throne he thought was banished was not empty.

The Mountain he thought was abandoned

was not abandoned.

And across the silent peak,

His mane began to stir in the wind.

the time is approaching when the Great White Lion will descend once more with one final Roar

a Roar that will shake the Nations and He will come to restore

the Mighty Kingdom of Judah

bring peace

to every creature of the savanna.

and open the gates of eden once and for all

and all of the creatures together praising and exalting

THE KING OF HEAVEN